necessary in a free courtry, it is the duty of every citizen to attend the primary meetings of the party with which he acts. If honest and intelligent men neglect the primaries, they there is hand the control primaries, they there is hand the control that the primary meetings of the party with which he acts. If honest and intelligent men neglect the primaries, they there is hand the control to the primaries, they there is a primaries and salutrically out in the salutrical and salutrical salutrical salutrical salutrical and salutrical salut of their party over to gad men. It is important to the welfare of the country that both the great political parties shall be controlled by wise and honest men; for a corrupt or debased mijority can offer but a feeble opposition to the majority, and in reality helps to strengthen and to debase the majority; whereas a powerful, honest, and intelligent minority compels the majority to govern carrielly and honestly. The demoralization of the party which is in the minority may thus, as you see, bring calamities on a country.

"Politics" have alrays been, in every free state, an enticine profession, followed by many honest and a gh-minded men out of a desire to see their favorite principles prevail; by other nich to advance their private fortunes; and by jet others from a mixture or combination of both these mo. tives. Our own politics are less corrupt, Parlor and Chamber Suits, Bureaus, Bedsteads, and our own politicists, taken as a class, Sofas, Lounges, What note, Book Shelves are far more scrupulous than those of most free nations have been either in ancient or modern times. When therefore, men talk or write about the pre-uliar debasement of our politics, you need not entirely believe them. There is a good deal of irritating importance and some arruntion among our ignorance and some prruption among our political leaders, but not nearly as much as there is in England of France; it vexes us more because we meet it face to face. The truth is that our party politics are more intelligently, less dishonestly, and more honorably conducted than those of Great Britain, with which we are ofteness compared, and that be averaged of political morality is higher in the United State

In an ideal state, the people, gifted with unfailing discernment of merit, would select continually, and without prompting of any kind, the wisest and ablest men for their rulers would divise always the most beneficent and the neblest of policies for the nation. Practically, however, these matters are manager somewhat differently. The people are guided more or less by newspapers and by political leaders; men, the or the reverse, are brought into political life by careful chanagement of their friends, or of the higger chiefs of a party, who are well on the lookout for capable went to help them; polattering are studied. men to help them; platforms are studied bver and prepared by small coteries of politicians, to make them attractive to the people and conformable to the principles which the party desires to advance; and—to return to our remary incettings—the delegates chosen at these are for the most part selected before and by the political managers of a count, or district, to insure the nomination of cottain candidates. Thus where several persons desire a nomination for the same place, the strife between them; and it is there that good circums many defeat a scorrupt or include childlate in their own party.

The preparatory work which I have described to you above is done in which is called a cancus - which is simply a private meeting of influenting politicians. Whether the cancus shall be a good or an evil thing depends on the character of the men who AT H. DODD compose it. It is a method of political action used alike it the best and the vilest politician; the wisest and the most necessary measures of the last twelve years, for instance, as well as the basest and most injurious, have been discussed and preparal in caucus before they, were presented to the public; and leth the ablest and the worst of our political leaders have then introduced into political life, and advanced in it, in these plent, secret, but not the efore necessarily will councils, by their fit nds. In a country where intelligence is widly defined, and where there is so high an average of ability, it is very seldoms that a man, except of the long and brilliant. as a matter of cours A fault in our political arrangements makes the cineus very often, in the hands L of bad men, an instrument for elevating corrupt men to power. This is the practice, in the states and cities, of electing a JiN, great many of the executive officers.

Where this is done the caucus enables corruptionists to prepose a ticket composed of a few good mensioned a large tail of the lowest class of politicians, and such a "slate" is then ferced upon the party as "the best thing that can be got." The viler kind of politicians do not trouble themselves much about a Congressional cancers but wherever a dozen or twenty. caucus but wherever a dezen or twenty candidates are ito be nominated, there is their opportunity. If the executive head, be the President, Governor, or Mayor, has the selection, appointment, and removation all his subordinates, a, "slate" becomes impossible, and the Green House and Bedding Plants. In some of our Vegetable Plants-all kinds in season. states, at one time, members of Congress were chosen on a general ticket; that is to say, the whole congressional delegation of the state was reced for by all the people of the state. But experience showed that the caucus put a few good men and a multitude of bad cases on the same ticket; multitude of bad ones on the same ticket; and as both parses did this, the result was for evit only of it is sometimes urged that if the President, Governor, or Mayor has unrestrained to ver to appoint or remove his subordenates, he will appoint bad men. But we the decisive check of the Senate does not always suffice to prevent the applicatment of conspicuously bad or incompetent men; and it does serve to conceal the facility of the people, in a unishis responsibility to the people, in a urisdent or Governor or Mayor shall show his character plainly by bad appointments; for then he will become hateful to the people, and lose its chance of re election, while the caucus will be shorn of its power

Do not be ashamed or afraid to meet in caucus, if you should by and by take part in politics; but bemember that had men and measures may be d feated there, as well as at the permany meetings.
